

Common Challenges

REVV'D UP

Even the smartest teams run into frustrating walls when trying to scale. The quotes below come from real founders and GTM leaders facing the same frustrations you might be feeling now.

Strong products. Smart teams. But still stuck.

Have a look at the challenges below and see which ones feel uncomfortably familiar—they're often the first signs of deeper GTM misalignment.

1. Hard Work Isn't Translating Into Results

When your team is constantly in motion but results stay flat, it's easy to feel like something's missing—but hard to pinpoint what. These are signs that effort isn't translating into growth, often because the GTM foundation isn't aligned to what actually drives traction.

“We're constantly launching campaigns, but pipeline doesn't grow.”

— VP of Growth, B2B SaaS platform in the HRTech space

“We know we need focus, but we're too busy executing to figure out where to aim.”

— CMO, Series A SaaS company targeting SMBs in eCommerce

“Marketing is busy, but sales still has to create their own leads.”

— Head of Sales, vertical SaaS company serving financial services firms

2. Deals Keep Stalling—and We Don't Know Why

You're getting interest, booking meetings, maybe even hearing enthusiasm—but then momentum disappears. When deals stall or go dark without explanation, it's usually a sign that the right pain or urgency was never fully uncovered.

“Our sales cycles are long and unpredictable—we get ghosted after good calls.”

— Founder/CEO, SaaS platform for legal services automation

“We're getting meetings, but they're not turning into customers.”

— Sales Director, compliance-focused SaaS for enterprise

“A lot of prospects like what we do, but timing is always 'next quarter.'”

— Founder, vertical SaaS company serving real estate operators

3. Sales Feels Hit-or-Miss

When sales performance varies wildly between reps—or depends on you stepping in—it’s a sign that success isn’t driven by a system. Without a repeatable motion, growth becomes unpredictable and hard to scale.

“We’ve had reps who crushed it—and others who completely missed. Same product.”

— CRO, SaaS company focused on infrastructure automation (DevOps vertical)

“I still step into big deals because I can’t count on the team to close them.”

— Founder, workflow automation SaaS company serving logistics industry

“We’ve hired a few sellers... it never quite works. We chalk it up to bad hires.”

— CEO, Series A SaaS platform in the energy industry

4. We’ve Tried Everything... But Still Feel Stuck

You’ve tried rewriting the copy, testing new channels, even shifting your positioning—but nothing seems to stick. When every move feels like a guess, it’s usually because the strategy lacks a clear, buyer-driven foundation.

“We keep tweaking the copy, switching channels, trying new offers—but it’s all guesswork.”

— Marketing Lead, B2B SaaS startup in the fintech space

“We’ve got a solid product, but we haven’t found the message that resonates.”

— Co-founder, early-stage SaaS company for healthcare compliance

“We’re constantly iterating, but not improving.”

— CEO, productivity SaaS app targeting small teams and freelancers

If these challenges sound familiar, you’re not alone—and they don’t fix themselves with more effort.

What’s needed isn’t more hustle, but a structured, buyer-aligned go-to-market system. This approach uses Voice-of-Customer insights, repeatable discovery, and clear sales and marketing processes to turn scattered effort into scalable growth.

Whether the issue is founder-led sales, misfiring campaigns, or stalled deals, the right system brings clarity, consistency, and traction.

Book a Free Discovery Call

to discuss your GTM challenges and see what a buyer-aligned system could look like for you.

Want to see how the system works?

Download the full playbook to Supercharging your GTM Engine

